the night before the performances athenians paraded a statue of dionysus paraded through the city, ending at the theatre with libations and sacrifices to the gods while she had been talking to mary hook he had remained silent and had brooded above her like a benevolent vulture